

Even better than the reel thing

THERE was a real risk of Vertigo yesterday as fleet-footed Irish dancers braved freezing conditions – and dizzying heights – to launch the Temple Bar Trad Fest.

The Kilfenora Ceili Band took to the roof of U2's Clarence Hotel to pay tribute to the band's rooftop gig in the video Where The Streets Have No Name – itself a homage to the Beatles' Get Back concert.

By Eva Marie Gibney

And they were joined by Irish dancers Fiona Stone and Mariam Elbadri who whirled around the rooftop to publicise the event.

The Tradfest kicks off on January 27 and runs to January 31 – and features traditional musicians of the calibre of Arty McGlynn, Matt Molloy and Finbar Furey.

Copyright material. This may only be copied under the terms of a Newspaper Licensing Agency agreement (www.nla.co.uk) or with written publisher permission.

For external republishing rights see www.nla-republishing.com

